Description

The painting is an oil on canvas transferred to a 17th-century panel depicting two figures, likely inspired by a religious or mythological subject, characterized by the typical use of chiaroscuro typical of the period. It is probably a fragment of a larger work. The scene is dominated by the face of a female figure who gazes upward with a dreamy and devout expression, while in the lower right corner, the silhouette of a bearded man emerges from the dark background. The facial features, the rosy complexion on the cheeks, and the strong contrast between light and shadow (chiaroscuro) strongly evoke the 17th-century Italian school of painting, with influences reminiscent of the style of masters such as Carlo Cignani or the Bolognese/Lombard school of the period. Frame: The work is set in a gilded wooden
