Description

A refined pair of floral still lifes attributed to Laura Bernasconi, known as "Laura dei Fiori" (Rome, 1622-1675), one of the most highly regarded Roman female painters of the 17th century who specialized in botanical and decorative painting. The works depict sumptuous vases brimming with colorful flowers, arranged with great compositional elegance against dark backgrounds imbued with an intense Baroque atmosphere. The canvases feature an exceptionally rich floral repertoire--tulips, lilies, carnations, peonies, and other seasonal flowers--rendered with extraordinary chromatic sensitivity and meticulous detail. The raking light enhances the softness of the petals and the vibrancy of the hues, creating a refined contrast with the shadowy background in keeping with the style of 17th-century Roman still life. The vertical format, combined with the theatricality of the composition, lends the works great decorative elegance, making them ideal for classical interiors and collections of old master paintings. The frames, understated and luminous, further enhance the pictorial quality and the overall balance of the works. A rare and prestigious example of 17th-century Roman floral painting, linked to the circle of great Baroque still-life artists and to the artistic sensibility of one of the few female leading figures of the Roman school of that era.
