Description

18th-century school Still Life with a Basket of Flowers Oil on canvas, 29.4 x 39.7 cm The painting in question, which can be associated with the 18th-century German-French school, depicts a refined and elegant still life. Resting on a small wicker basket with harmonious, curvilinear weaves are various types of flowers. Each type of flower, thanks to the painter's careful and meticulous depiction, is perfectly recognizable: a red poppy, rendered in detail both in its delicate, ephemeral petals and its black stamens, immediately catches our eye, as do the jagged petals of the two roses, whose leaves and stems--covered with thin, pointed thorns--are clearly distinguishable. This small floral arrangement also includes violets, chrysanthemums, dahlias, small Rubiaceae
