Description

Art Deco terracotta garden fountain with a refined patina, created around 1920 by the famous Italian sculptor Ezio Ceccarelli (1865-1927). Depicting the Allegory of Summer, this monumental fountain is a remarkable example of early 20th-century Italian decorative sculpture, combining classical inspiration with the elegant stylization characteristic of Art Deco. At the center of the fountain is a finely modeled high relief depicting a young woman crowned with ears of wheat, a traditional symbol of abundance and the summer harvest. Beneath the relief, an expressive spout shaped like a fish's head jets water into a finely carved basin shaped like a cornucopia, reinforcing the symbolism of fertility, prosperity, and the life-giving power of water. This composition evokes the famous sculptural tradition of Italian Renaissance fountains and, in its design, resembles the famous nymphs of the Fontaine des Innocents, combining architectural elegance with refined naturalistic modeling. Crafted with remarkable attention to detail, the fountain attests to the exceptional craftsmanship for which Ezio Ceccarelli is renowned. His works bridged the gap between the late 19th century and the advent of Art Deco, making his sculptures highly sought-after by collectors of monumental garden ornaments and Italian decorative arts. Presented in excellent condition, the fountain features a beautiful patina and can be installed immediately in a French garden, a courtyard, or an architectural space. Its impressive dimensions and sculptural quality also make it ideal for indoor display in a grand entry hall or a sunroom. A rare opportunity to acquire a museum-quality Italian Art Deco garden fountain, the work of one of the greatest sculptors of the era. Artist Ezio Ceccarelli
