Description

Two large decorative panels featuring roses.

Painted in oil on canvas in the late 19th century, signed by Olga B. (an artist active in the 19th and 20th centuries). The two works are sold as a set. These two large vertical floral compositions are slightly different in size (105 and 104). They depict climbing roses against a light background. The brushwork is delicate and controlled, without excessive impasto. The composition on the left is denser in its foliage, while the one on the right is more airy. Both compositions. The palette is harmonious and slightly muted, typical of romantic works from the late 19th century. These are reminiscent of a French country cottage. A pair of panels from the same artist and theme is a rarity from this period, and they would make a great addition to a special space.
