Description

Architectural table clock in ebony and semi-precious stones, made in central Italy in the 18th century, a fine example of late Baroque cabinetmaking, in which the elegance of classical architecture is combined with the decorative richness of the stone inlays. The case, entirely veneered in ebony, features an architectural structure marked by side pilasters and a broken cornice, embellished with a polychrome semi-precious stone inlay. Inlays of breccia, polychrome marbles, and lapis lazuli, framed by thin gilded profiles, create a sophisticated play of colors that enhances the austerity of the ebony. The dial, enclosed within a door with its original glass, is made of brass with Roman numerals for the hours and an outer minute track. The piece as a whole reflects the taste that developed in central
