Description

An icon of contemporary jewelry, this Boucheron Quatre ring offers a modern reinterpretation of the key aesthetic codes of the House founded by Frédéric Boucheron. Crafted in 750/°° yellow gold (18 KT, Swiss Saint Bernard head hallmark), it is signed, numbered, and hallmarked on the inside of the band, and bears the master's hallmark. Its design consists of four successive sections, each referencing an iconic motif from the House's archives: the grosgrain, inspired by silk ribbons and the Boucheron family's history as cloth merchants; the Clou de Paris, evoking the cobblestones of Place Vendôme; the double godron, an architectural motif symbolizing union; and finally, a polished central line echoing the spirit of the traditional diamond band in an interpretation crafted entirely in gold. monochromatic interpretation, the richness of the design rests exclusively on the interplay of volumes and textures, fully highlighting the precision of craftsmanship and the finesse of execution characteristic of the House of Boucheron. This apparent simplicity reveals the full extent of the workshop's expertise, where every detail contributes to the composition's balance. The interplay of polished, sculpted, and geometric surfaces creates a remarkable play of light that brings the ring to life from every angle. Despite its structured and bold design, its perfectly polished interior ensures exceptional comfort when worn. Launched in 2004, the Quatre collection quickly became Boucheron's contemporary signature. By bringing together four historic motifs in a single creation, it elegantly embodies the House's heritage while asserting a resolutely contemporary, instantly recognizable style. An iconic ring, as comfortable to wear every day as it is sought after by connoisseurs of fine jewelry, combining a strong identity, exceptional craftsmanship, and timeless appeal.
