Description

A painting from the 1970s belonging to the Jaime Parlade school, depicting a tiger in a bold and highly decorative style. The composition shows the animal in profile, walking through a stylized landscape, with rhythmic black stripes on a golden-yellow body against a light background. Characteristic of the Jaime Parlade School's aesthetic, the work reflects a blend of folkloric inspiration and graphic refinement, emphasizing pattern, color, and movement rather than strict naturalism. The simplified vegetation and ornamental treatment enhance its expressive and exotic character. The piece is framed An eye-catching work, ideal for interiors seeking a distinctive mid-century accent
