Description

This magnificent pair of tapestry door panels has been thoroughly cleaned, hand-lined with 100% linen fabric, and meticulously inspected by our experts in our artisanal workshop. They are now ready to adorn your home. This pair of 19th-century Aubusson tapestry door hangings is a remarkable example of hunting-inspired decor, blending aristocratic elegance with rich ornamentation. A superb pair of tapestry door hangings from the Aubusson Manufactory, dating from the 19th century, of large dimensions (290 × 132 cm each). Each panel features a particularly refined vertical composition, framed by a wide border simulating a carved frame, embellished with vine scrolls, foliage, and small red berries that enliven the overall design. In the center unfolds an impressive hunting trophy, consisting of pheasants, partridges, a hare, game birds, and crossed rifles, suspended amid an abundant floral decoration in autumnal tones. At the base, a delicate light blue ribbon tied in a bow adds a touch of lightness and elegance to this richly balanced composition. The color palette, dominated by browns, ochres, beiges, deep reds, and faded greens, lends the piece a warm and noble atmosphere, characteristic of the interiors of 19th-century bourgeois mansions and castles. The nuanced ivory background perfectly highlights the motifs, while the mahogany-brown frame enhances the sense of depth. These curtains were designed to adorn large interior openings while improving the insulation of the rooms. Their hunting-themed design evokes the decorative arts prized during the Second Empire and the late 19th century, in the tradition of prestigious French manufacturers.

Characteristics: Origin: Aubusson Manufactory. Period: 19th century. Dimensions: 290 × 132 cm each. Motifs: hunting trophies, birds, a hare, rifles, foliage, and scrollwork. Style: hunting motifs, a 19th-century reinterpretation of the Louis XV style. Condition: appears to be in excellent condition based on the photograph, with a harmonious patina consistent with its age (to be confirmed by close inspection). This pair constitutes a high-quality decorative set, sought after for its elegance, substantial size, and hunting motifs, emblematic of the craftsmanship of the Aubusson Manufactory. It will naturally find its place in a classic interior, a château, or a residence of character.
