Description

This elegant antique leather rifle case dates from the early 20th century, around 1900. Originally designed to protect and carry a hunting rifle, it is made of leather. Its elongated, tapered shape--characteristic of hunting and shooting equipment of the era--is both sturdy and elegant, reflecting the quality and practicality expected of hunting and shooting accessories used on European farms in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Over time, the leather has developed a beautiful natural patina, with subtle variations in color and signs of wear that highlight its authenticity. Originally designed as a protective rifle case, it is now a prized collector's item associated with the traditional world of hunting, shooting, and country life. It will perfectly complement a collection of antique hunting and
