Description

A splendid sculptural group made entirely of ivory, depicting Venus with Cupid, likely created in Germany in the early 19th century. The work represents a refined allegory of Love, with the goddess Venus elegantly depicted in the act of raising her bow, while Cupid, armed with a quiver and arrow, reaches out toward her with vivacity in a composition rich in grace and movement. The naturalistic base is finely carved with doves, roses, and floral motifs--attributes traditionally associated with the goddess of Love--which further enrich the symbolic value of the piece as a whole. The extraordinary quality of the carving is evident in the perfect anatomical rendering of the figures, the softness of the drapery, the exceptional craftsmanship of the hair, and the richness of the decorative details--all testifying to the skill of a sculptor of the highest caliber. The circular base, also made entirely of ivory, is embellished with elegant, finely carved ornamental elements that lend the work balance and a sense of grandeur. The group is in excellent condition, with a splendid natural patina and no notable flaws. An important work of great artistic quality, intended for a refined collection of European ivory sculpture. Height: 29 cm. WITH CITES
