Description

Oil painting on canvas depicting a young woman dressed in the Italian style, seated near a fountain with a small child on her lap. A vine, rising from the fountain, draws the eye toward the background, where the silhouette of a young man playing the flute faces the sea. Jean Auguste Franquelin (1798-1839) was a French painter trained in the studio of Jean-Baptiste Regnault. He exhibited regularly at the Salon beginning in 1824, presenting mainly genre scenes, portraits, and historical and mythological subjects. His works are characterized by balanced composition and meticulous execution--a legacy of his neoclassical training--while leaning toward Romanticism through their sensitive and intimate touch. Mark of the art dealer Alfred Binant (1822-1904) on the reverse. Visible
