Description

A beautiful earthenware windowpane decorated in so-called "Marseille blue" with motifs of two branches of blooming roses, the base adorned with a foliage frieze, the upper edge cut to form a thick, undulating lip edged with a generous blue border accented by a combed pattern. It is flanked by two curving handles adorned with striations resembling branches and foliage; beneath each handle, one can discern an insect motif--a butterfly or mayfly.* Late 18th century
*Comparable to the work of the Pierrette Candelot-Perrin workshop, known as La Veuve Perrin. Note: there are three hair-like imperfections on the upper rim that have not caused any further damage (see the last photo for details). If you have any questions, we are here to help.
