Description

Architectural tulip vases in white porcelain - Germany or the Netherlands, circa 1950-1960. An elegant set of white glazed porcelain tulip vases, likely made in Germany or the Netherlands in the 1950s-1960s. Inspired by the prestigious 17th-century Delft tulip vases, these pieces feature an obelisk-like silhouette punctuated by multiple cones designed to hold a tulip flower or bud. Their architectural design, marked by remarkable simplicity, beautifully combines the heritage of Dutch ceramics with the refined aesthetics of postwar design. Displayed together, they create a truly sculptural arrangement, even without flowers. Adorned with a few tulips, anemones, or ranunculus, they fulfill their original purpose and become a centerpiece on a console table, a mantelpiece, or a reception table. Their luminous white glaze highlights the quality of their forms and lends them a timeless elegance, allowing them to blend seamlessly into both classic and contemporary interiors. Condition: in perfect condition, with no chips, no restoration, and no cracks. A rare decorative pair, notable for its two different heights, appealing to both lovers of 20th-century ceramics and collectors of tulip vases inspired by historic Delft designs.
