pattern is consistently repeated across the field:19 large, highly elaborate medallions arranged vertically in a row of 4. This amounts to a total of 76 guls, lending this rug great elegance and a heraldic character.Colors: Persian blue, orange, chestnut, wine-red, midnight blue, pine green, lichen, and ivory. One can also notice color variations intentionally created by the weaver.On certain designs, sawtooth-shaped diamonds called "ener-dychi" appear along the borders. See photo

Finishes: kilim-style at both ends.Typically, the borders are the same color as the field; this is part of the nomadic way of life, which avoids all forms of ostentation. However, the design here is very delicate--I invite you to take a close look.##

Usually, the tribe had its own "gul," likely serving as a rallying emblem.The soft, lustrous wool is knotted very tightly, resulting in a dense and very fine weave.The pile lies flat against the surface, and this rug has a beautiful patina due to its age.Antique Turkmen rugs are of very high quality.In other regions, nomadic rugs are often loosely knotted and have long pile, unlike Afghan or Turkmen rugs, which feature dense, tight knots using the Persian knot, velvet-like strands, and goat or sheep's wool pile that is supple and lustrous.Goat and camel hair are more commonly used for the warp and weft.These rugs have a masculine aura and have been prized since the 19th century for decorating businessmen's offices.These majestic rugs are certainly the finest in Central Asia and are the work of Turkmen tribes.The same knotting style and motifs are found in carpets from neighboring Turkmenistan as well as in Afghanistan.Along with Caucasian carpets, these remain among the hardest to distinguish, as the motifs are so numerous and specific to the clans throughout Central Asia.This rug is in good condition, displaying a beautiful patina and normal wear and tear due to age;This piece is a true artifact of Central Asian cultures.
