Description

Beautiful Caucasian rug (142× 86 cm), made by villagers or nomads, warp and pile from wool, with distinct geometric patterns on a midnight blue background. About two-thirds of the way across the rug, design opens up, becoming lighter and more floral, and colors shift subtly, with more red--perhaps a special commission or a change in weaver's hand. This asymmetry gives our small rug a distinct personality; it is truly a tribal rug, some adventure not intended for commercial sale, and I believe that is quite rare.A close-up of the knotting reveals a relatively fine structure and meticulous workmanship. I counted about 35 knots per decimeter.It seems to me that this rug is quite old--19th century or circa 1900--as the red wool is more worn than the other colors. Since I'm not an expert, I won't risk
