Description

Large Louis XV-era paneled trumeau, featuring an Italianate lakeside landscape, with an antique mirror, 190 cm Impressive Louis XV-era trumeau panel, carved and molded wood, painted in shades of aqua green and accented with beautiful antique gilding. The upper section features an oil-on-canvas painting depicting an Italianate lakeside landscape animated by figures, in the style of Louis-Philippe Crépin. The composition centers on a body of water bordered by trees, a rustic residence with a tower, a rowboat occupied by several figures, and small figures arranged along the shore. The wide-open sky, the bluish distances, and the picturesque architecture place this painting within the tradition of fantasy landscapes inspired by Italy. The painting is set within a wood paneling frame with an undulating design, adorned with a central shell, foliage, scrollwork, and carved and gilded rocaille motifs. The side panels are punctuated by vertical panels outlined with gilded fillets. The lower section features a large antique mirror set within its molded and gilded frame. The gilding, well-preserved overall, displays an antique patina and some signs of wear consistent with the piece's age. The mirror shows significant wear on the silvered surface, with pitting, oxidation, discoloration, and areas of reduced reflectivity visible in the photographs. These age-related marks contribute to the trumeau's decorative character. Signs of use, minor touch-ups, paint wear, and minor imperfections are evident as shown in the photographs. This large trumeau is a remarkable decorative piece for a château, a historic residence, a private mansion, a reception room, a library, or a gallery.
