Description

A beautiful and significant 18th-century Virgin and Child sculpture carved from fruitwood (walnut). A sculpture of great finesse in its execution. Note the beauty of the faces, the richness of the drapery, and the intricate details, as well as the sculpture's overall condition. There are numerous old holes from wood-boring insects, which in no way affect the integrity or stability of the piece. As is often the case, one hand is missing. (See photos)
