Description

A beautiful and expressive bronze bust depicting a young girl, likely Marie Troubetzkoy, by Paul Troubetzkoy / Paolo Troubetzkoy (1866-1938). The young girl is depicted standing, in a slightly confident and charming pose, wearing a wide-brimmed hat and a dress with softly draped folds. One hand rests at her side, while the other holds a portion of the dress, giving the sculpture a sense of movement, spontaneity, and character. The sculpture is executed in Troubetzkoy's characteristic Impressionist style, with a lively, dynamic, and freely modeled surface. Here, the artist does not seek a cold, academic finish, but rather the immediate presence of the model--her posture, her mood, and her individuality. This free and vibrant approach made Troubetzkoy one of the most
