Description

An elegant bronze sculpture depicting the Buddha seated in the bhumisparsa mudra (Earth-Touching Mudra), a posture symbolizing the moment of Enlightenment. The sculpture features a serene face with delicate features, hair rendered in fine curls topped by the traditional ushnisha, and a simple drape falling over the left shoulder. The Buddha rests on a pedestal decorated with stylized lotus petals. It was cast using the traditional lost-wax method, and traces of the refractory clay core remain beneath the base, attesting to its manufacturing technique. Traces of hand finishing visible beneath the base confirm that this is a handcrafted piece. It features a beautiful, even, antique black patina that highlights the volumes and lines of this devotional sculpture intended for a home altar.
