Description

An elegant serving tray with a long, oval shape, dating from early 20th century and attributed to the cabinetmakers of Nancy, although unsigned. Its charm lies as much to its solid wood frame, with its soft and harmonious lines, as to the delicacy of its central marquetry. The marquetry evokes a landscape brought to life by the breath of wind, which seems to make leaves--with their subtly contrasting shades--dance. A large dragonfly pays a visit to this poetic and refined composition. The ergonomic handles, integrated into the structure, enhance functionality of this object, which is as decorative as it is practical.
