Description

Fine-Quality Early 19th-Century Regency Mahogany Upholstered Chaise Longue Sofa
*England, circa 1820*A fine-quality early 19th-century Regency-period mahogany chaise longue, dating from around 1820 and in excellent condition. This elegant chaise is constructed from solid mahogany and features a sweeping right-hand raised arm and back, beautifully carved with a refined scroll design that flows seamlessly into the seat. The frame stands on turned baluster front and rear legs--all original--terminating in delicate brass casters that add to the piece's Regency charm. The chaise's seat height is 44 cm. Professionally reupholstered in a luxurious yellow floral damask, the chaise boasts deep buttoning on the arm and back, with matching braided trim and a coordinating bolster cushion. The traditionally stuffed and sprung seat, filled with horsehair, offers firm yet comfortable support, designed so that you sit elegantly on the chaise rather than sinking into it. The underside is finished in burlap in the traditional manner, reflecting the high quality of the craftsmanship throughout. The mahogany frame has been carefully cleaned and French polished, bringing out a rich, warm color and a beautiful sheen that highlights the fine lines and proportions of the design. Equally at home in a living room, bedroom, dressing room, or study, this Regency chaise longue works wonderfully in both traditional and contemporary interiors. It is not only a striking decorative statement but also a highly practical and comfortable piece of period furniture--a refined addition to any home.
