Description

An African elephant tusk finely carved in high relief, depicting a procession of openwork elephants heading toward a crocodile with its mouth open. African work, likely from Central Africa, circa 1920-1930, in the style of carved tusks intended for the colonial market in the first half of the 20th century. The sculpture is carved from a single tusk, preserving the natural curve of the ivory. The elephants are rendered in the round with openwork detailing that highlights the tusk's volume, while the tip is carved into a crocodile's head. Length: 33 cm
