Description

China, second half of the 19th century, a rare and very beautiful ceremonial tiger cap made of embroidered silk, designed for young boys to protect them from evil spirits. On the back, a long neck guard with a red background is very finely decorated with an embroidered flower and lotus buds. This unusual piece was intended to protect a young boy from a wealthy family. Good condition, aside from a few snags and signs of wear; nothing out of the ordinary given its age and frequent use. Dimensions: Height (without ears) 35 x Width 32 x Total height with ears 41 (cm). A certificate of authenticity, in which we guarantee the details of this listing, will be issued and provided to the buyer.
