tankard was cast from a mold dating to the late 16th or early 17th century and is identical in every respect to the model produced by the master known as the "Crown Master" (Meister mit der Krone), who was active in Marienberg during that period. Due to the absence of this master founder's touchmark, it cannot be definitively dated to the early 17th century; it is therefore classified as "after" the original, indicating a later production from the 17th, 18th, or 19th century. These objects with relief decoration, known as "Edelzinn," were not chiseled, as is often claimed, but came "straight from the foundry," which required a mold of high-quality definition and a high level of mastery of casting techniques. The detail of the relief decoration on the tankard presented here is of a quality equal to that of its period counterparts.
