Description

ARM258 - A striking architectural bookcase made of lacquered wood. The imposing structure extends along the entire wall and features a design punctuated by pilasters and molded paneling. In the center is a single-leaf door. The upper section features a series of closed doors designed for storing documents and archives, while the side sections have glass-fronted doors that allow for viewing and displaying books. The lower section features hinged doors that provide compositional balance to the whole and offer additional storage space. It can be used as a bookcase or decorative wainscoting. 19th century
