Description

Description Francesco Paglia attr. Saint Catherine of Siena Oil on canvas in 28,15x35,24 The central figure is Saint Catherine of Siena, recognizable through various traditional iconographic elements. Her youthful and gentle face bears an ecstatic and contemplative expression, typical of depictions of mystical saints. She wears a golden crown, symbolizing her spiritual royalty and her importance within the Church (she is a Doctor of the Church and patron saint of Italy). A white veil covers her hair, characteristic of the Dominican habit, the order to which she belonged as a tertiary. In her right hand, she holds a martyr's palm and a crucifix, symbols of faith and deep mystical devotion. The palm, in particular, also represents spiritual victory and sacrifice. The setting is sober, with a dark and undefined background that emphasizes the figure of the saint within a painted oval, giving the impression of a framed portrait. This is a mature work, likely dating to the late period of Francesco Paglia's painting career (Brescia, 1635-1714), as suggested by clear stylistic references found in similar works in the city of Brescia. These include the cycle of roundels depicting saints painted at the end of the century for the Basilica of Madonna delle Grazie, and a Saint Eurosia housed in the Diocesan Seminary. Several stylistic features are typical of Paglia: for this Saint, whose resemblance to the Seminary painting is striking, the diagonal composition stands out as a figurative prototype frequently used by the painter. Also characteristic is the flattened background, clearly intended to highlight the narrative subjects, enhanced by the subtle use of diffused light and veiled color. From the critical analysis, Dott.
