Description

An Empire-style writing desk in walnut dating from the early 19th century, characterized by an elegant and refined design. The top is made of white marble, offering a sturdy and valuable surface, while the balustrade is decorated with a central shell carving and eagle heads on the sides--details that evoke the Empire style. The section beneath the top houses three drawers, embellished with corners carved with acanthus leaves, which add a touch of sophistication. The lyre-shaped legs, ending in scrolls, are joined by a molded crossbar, providing stability and a harmonious aesthetic. The poplar interior reveals meticulous craftsmanship. Despite some missing parts, the piece as a whole represents a distinctive example of period furniture, ideal for classic interiors and antique collections.
