Description

An antique oil lamp carved from a single block of stone, with a simple, archaic form, cautiously attributed to traditional craftsmanship from the Levant, likely from Syria or Jordan. It consists of a circular reservoir extended by an elongated spout designed to hold the wick. The piece shows significant signs of wear, with numerous traces of oil and old grime, attesting to long-term domestic use. This lamp is appealing for its authentic character, its entirely hand-carved construction, and its rustic forms, characteristic of folk art from the Near East. Dimensions: Length: 16 cm; Height: 8 cm; Width: 6 to 7 cm; Weight: 750 g. In good condition with wear, small old chips, and deposits resulting from use, all of which fully contribute to its authenticity. For any questions:
