Description

Bronze bust of Pierre-Jean de Béranger - Late 19th century
An elegant bronze bust with a nuanced brown patina depicting Pierre-Jean de Béranger (1780-1857), a famous chanson writer, poet, and major figure in 19th-century French literature. Created in the late 19th century, this sculpture features high-quality casting and chiseling. Béranger is depicted in his characteristic suit, with his bow tie and long hair, in a pose that is both understated and imbued with dignity. His lively gaze and meditative expression perfectly capture the personality of this writer who left a lasting mark on his era. The bronze is coated with a superb antique patina--deep and warm--that beautifully highlights the contours of the face and the details of the clothing. It rests on an elegant pedestal, perfectly proportioned to the sculpture as a whole. Highly popular during the second half of the 19th century, Pierre-Jean de Béranger was considered the voice of the French people. His songs, blending poetry, political satire, and sensitivity, were widely circulated and brought him considerable fame, making his portrait a sought-after subject among sculptors and publishers of art bronzes. This sculpture will naturally find its place in a library, a study, or a collection dedicated to literature, history, or 19th-century French sculpture. A high-quality decorative work that combines the charm of an antique patina with a tribute to one of the great intellectual figures of French Romanticism.
