Description

Women's "Étrier" Watch by Jean PERRET, HERMÈS CAE26LAN045 ModelRare women's "Étrier" watch, featuring an ADOLPH SHILD movement--a manufacturer that produced movements for several luxury watchmakers in the 1940s/50Hermès launched this model, which was manufactured by Jaeger-LeCoultre; however, since the design was not trademarked, major Swiss watchmakers such as Jean Perret and a few others who sold their products on the Place Vendôme marketed and produced variations of this model.This is therefore a rare and elegant ladies' "Étrier"-style wristwatch, in the spirit of the vintage timepiece designs distributed by Hermès.The "Étrier" model is characterized by its rectangular case and side clasps, which evoke the shape of a horse's stirrup. refined aesthetic establishes a clear connection to the equestrian world so dear to Hermès and is today one of the most recognizable designs in vintage luxury watchmaking.The Étrier design first appeared in women's watches as early as the 1930s.It should be noted that not all stirrup-shaped watches were necessarily manufactured by Jaeger-LeCoultre, even when associated with Hermès.The appeal of this family of watches also lies in the fact that several watchmakers and brands have produced or marketed watches featuring this distinctive aesthetic. Among them is notably Jean Perret, whose "Étrier" ladies' watches are now featured in specialized collections and auctions. It features a manual-winding mechanical movement.The collaboration between the great Swiss watchmakers and Hermès--as well as Jaeger, Perret, and others--has made these pieces particularly sought-after today by collectors of vintage timepieces and antique objects.Movement: mechanical, hand-woundType: ladies' watchModel: ÉtrierPeriod: 20th century, vintageStyle: Art Deco / ModernistA charming piece, ideal for collectors of vintage watches, Hermès enthusiasts, and those passionate about the history of Swiss watchmaking.A watch rare in its design, a testament to an era when the great Parisian luxury houses drew upon the expertise of the finest Swiss watchmakers.Dimensions - measurementsCase 27 x 36 mm excluding crown (strap included)Thickness: 7 mmWidth between lugs: 16 mmMaximum bracelet length: 17 cmMovement - MechanicalHand-wound movement, in excellent condition, with no signs of oxidation or internal moisture.Caliber AS 1676 Adolph Schild S.A.
