Description

According to Muller: a four-light Art Deco-era chandelier, dating from the 1920s-1930s, combining an elegant frame of patinated wrought iron with three large molded glass globes. The frame features a slender design consisting of long iron rods joined at the top by stylized coils and volutes. Three widely arched arms frame the central light and give the entire piece a particularly balanced silhouette. The four pressed molded glass globes, of varying sizes, are adorned in high relief with a lavish botanical and floral motif, composed of stylized foliage, flowers, and fruits. The central globe, which is larger, serves as the focal point of the composition. When lit, the glass diffuses a warm light and beautifully highlights the depth of the molded decoration. A highly decorative light
