Description

An important 17th-century religious sculpture depicting a saintly bishop, shown standing in his episcopal vestments. Carved from wood, it retains significant traces of its original polychrome paint, visible mainly on the vestments. The sculpture has a very pronounced patina, with numerous signs of wear, deterioration, and historical losses. This condition, deeply marked by the passage of time, lends it great charm and presence. The wood has undergone curative treatment against wood-boring insects, which has halted their activity and stabilized the object.
