Description

Set of five chairs from the Consulate period, late 18th-early 19th century, made of cherry wood. The semicircular backs feature carved eagle heads at the ends, a motif characteristic of the decorative repertoire of the Consulate period. Each chair is distinguished by a different carved design in the center of the back, offering five varied decorative patterns. The seats have retained their original two-tone red and gold straw-woven upholstery, which is particularly decorative. The legs are joined by crossbars, with a turned front rail featuring chamfered edges. The five chairs are accompanied by cushions made from a Directoire-era fabric featuring red floral motifs on a yellow background, edged with red piping.
