Description

An elegant majolica pharmacy jar produced in Turin in the 18th century, decorated with a refined polychrome floral band that frames a central panel bearing the inscription of the pharmaceutical contents in calligraphic script. The decoration, executed in delicate shades of yellow, light blue, green, and brown on a white background, reflects the Piedmontese Rococo style and the quality of 18th-century Turin craftsmanship. Its classic shape--with a tapered cylindrical body and ring-shaped foot--makes it a refined example of ceramics intended for historic apothecaries.
