Description

LAPPONIA earrings in 750 yellow/white gold (18 karat), featuring a sculptural composition of organic shapes inspired by nature. The matte, textured surface contrasts subtly with the polished gold edge, giving the piece an expressive, three-dimensional structure. Each earring is adorned with a small closed-set diamond, creating a delicate and refined play of light. Asymmetrical lines, reminiscent of a stylized leaf, lend the piece a dynamic and modern character. They bear the manufacturer's hallmark and have been certified by the Lithuanian Assay Office. The Finnish jewelry house Lapponia Jewelry was founded in 1960 and has become known for its bold and sculptural designs. The brand is closely associated with the renowned jewelry designer and sculptor Björn Ragnar Weckström, whose works are characterized by a modernist aesthetic and organic forms. His designs are distinguished by raw surfaces, uncut semiprecious stones, and asymmetrical shapes. Among his most famous creations is the necklace worn by actress Carrie Fisher (Princess Leia) in the 1977 film Star Wars. Lapponia jewelry is often compared to small art sculptures, highlighting texture, the play of light, and the beauty of imperfection. This brand is distinguished by its deliberate rejection of traditional brilliance, favoring a matte finish and relief. Lapponia's creations are prized by collectors worldwide as an exceptional example of Nordic design.
