Alain Girel, the artist:The son of schoolteachers, he spent his childhood in Montmélian, Savoie. In 1959, he and his younger brother Jean set up their first studio in the basement of the family home. In 1962, the brothers held their first exhibition at the Chambéry Youth and Culture Center.After graduating from high school in 1965, he enrolled at the Académie du Feu, led by sculptor Szabo, in Paris. In 1966, he and his future wife, Mireille Dégrange, bought a dilapidated house in Valaurie, an abandoned village in the Drôme department. Following his lead, other artists settled in the village, where workshops and exhibitions were organized. In 1968, he earned a state diploma as a community education advisor. He ultimately turned down a position as director of a youth center in the Paris region and decided to devote himself entirely to ceramics and sculpture. He met his new partner, Jeanne Grandpierre, and lived with her in La Borne from 1974 to 1981. There, he conceived the 1st plan for a ceramics center. From 1981 to 1989, he taught in the ceramics department at the Mâcon School of Fine Arts. In 1986, he was appointed project manager for an initiative at the Ministry of Culture. In 1988, François Mitterrand visited the ceramicist's studio to personally select pieces to purchase. He would return for two more visits. In 1996, he was elected to the Board of Directors of the World Craft Council Europe. Documentaries about Alain GIREL have been produced by France 3 and TF1, and literary works have been written by his brother Jean. Countless works can be found in major private and public collections in France and elsewhere, some of which were acquired by Hermès, Christian Lacroix, the Emir of Qatar, and others. He passed away in 2001. It is very common to find the artist's pieces on the international art market and at major auction houses specializing in fine ceramics.
