Description

Jean Benner (1836-1906). Bouquet of Dahlias Oil on canvas, signed lower left This remarkable work by Jean Benner, a renowned Alsatian painter, embodies the elegance and technical mastery of the late 19th century. Depicting a bouquet of dahlias of rare delicacy, it captures the radiance of the petals in a palette of pastel and vibrant hues, combining pearly white, soft pink, and touches of purple and orange. The rendering of the foliage, in deep, nuanced shades of green, reveals the artist's characteristic meticulous observation of nature. The signature, located at the bottom left, bears an intriguing detail: an error--likely made by Benner himself--that had to be corrected, adding a touch of authenticity and charm to this unique piece. The canvas, measuring 95 x 45 cm, is set within a period gilded wooden frame measuring 104 x 54 cm, which enhances the work as a whole with its artisanal craftsmanship and golden patina. This frame, with its delicate and regular motifs, reinforces the work's luxurious character, typical of late 19th-century framing. Jean Benner, born in Mulhouse, was a master of still lifes and floral compositions, trained at the École des Beaux-Arts in Paris. His style, both realistic and poetic, draws inspiration from the great masters of French painting while retaining an Alsatian sensibility. With its balanced colors and harmonious composition, this painting perfectly illustrates his talent for bringing simple subjects to life with timeless grace. Ideal for lovers of Impressionist and academic art, this work combines rarity, history, and aesthetic appeal, making it both a cultural investment and a refined decorative piece. Perfect for adorning a living room, office, or gallery, it will add a touch of classic elegance to any interior. You can follow me on Instagram by clicking this link:
