Description

Rare blowgun-style cane. The bamboo shaft consists of two parts and unscrews to accommodate the cartridge, with the barrel inserted inside the bamboo. In the upper third is the floating striker, and the pommel unscrews to reveal a blowhole through which one can blow to propel the striker. The ferrule slides out and holds the hook in place, allowing the cartridge to be removed. In the section containing the firing pin, there is a through-hole into which a wooden object (a match or similar) can be inserted to prevent the firing pin from accidentally striking the cartridge. The set is complete, functional, and in very good condition. Early 20th century.
