Description

Luigi Filippo mahogany display cabinet, dating from the second quarter of the 19th century, from Italy. This exquisite display cabinet is distinguished by its central glass-paned door, flanked by projecting glass panels that create a striking yet harmonious effect. The decorative corners feature turned columns, finely carved with scrollwork, which enhance the overall elegance of the piece. The interior walls are lined with mirrors that amplify the light and create a sense of spaciousness, complemented by two shelves ideal for displaying precious objects. Please note that on the right side, one pane of glass is broken and another is missing--a factor to consider for any restoration. Perfect for enriching a room with a touch of history and refinement.
