Description

An important decorative triptych painted on canvas, dating from the 19th century, depicting a medieval-inspired scene set in a vast waterside landscape. The composition is brought to life by figures in richly detailed medieval costumes: long gowns made of colorful, ornate fabrics; elaborate headdresses for the women; and doublets, hose, and hoods for the men. The central panel is particularly enlivened by a group of elegant ladies and a flower seller. The two side panels extend the scene with architecture, gardens, and figures. The pointed-arch compositions reinforce the neo-Gothic character of the ensemble. Antique frames made of stained wood. Visible wear, crazing, and small losses, consistent with the piece's age.
