Description

A rare and exceptional Tao Comme des Garçons runway dress, designed by Tao Kurihara, from the Fall/Winter 2006 collection. This piece perfectly exemplifies the experimental and poetic aesthetic developed by Tao Kurihara at Comme des Garçons. Crafted from lightweight black synthetic fabric, it features remarkable gathering, pleating, and draping, forming a bodice entirely built up with volume. The dress is embellished with numerous ruffles with intentionally frayed, raw-edged hems, a detail characteristic of the collection's deconstructed construction. The fitted bodice contrasts with the flared, flowing skirt, creating a particularly sculptural silhouette. It features two straps that can be worn over the shoulders. On the runway, the dress is shown layered over a black short-sleeved shirt, paired with leggings and sneakers, perfectly illustrating the original styling conceived for the fashion show. A photograph from the runway show specifically featuring this model is included with the photos in the listing. The dress retains its original "tao COMME des GARÇONS" label, indicating size M and made in Japan. Details Designer: Tao Kurihara Brand: Tao Comme des Garçons Collection: Fall/Winter 2006 Color: Black Size: M Made in: Japan Material: synthetic fabric Original label Piece featured on the runway Condition Overall in very good vintage condition. The frayed finishes and raw edges are intentional and an integral part of the original design of the dress. A rare piece of contemporary Japanese fashion, particularly of interest to collectors of Comme des Garçons, Tao Kurihara, and avant-garde runway pieces. The runway photograph serves as proof that this dress is part of the collection and is particularly interesting for its archival value.
