Description

More than just a decorative surface, it is a boundless field of visual and sensory energy. An expanding geometry whose colorful pulsations bring every square centimeter to life. The work is a spectacle, an invitation to wonder and exploration. Here, there is no central motif; the viewer is invited to an immersive experience. Here, there are no borders--they're unnecessary--as the field unfolds into infinity. One can easily see a constellation of stars; the diamond-shaped pattern almost appears like a stamp impression. The visual effect is kinetic. What blows me away, I must say, is the total mastery. The perfectly balanced graphic composition and a harmony of hues as delightful as they are delicate. I mean it in this sense: this kilim reminds me of haute couture! Yet, it's impossible to imagine the weaver having followed a related academic path; nor is she assisted by a whole team of helpers. It is the power of tradition that guides her work with every weft thread. The main motif, the star-shaped diamond, consists of a cruciform or hourglass-shaped core, surrounded by serrated tiers, forming an eight-pointed geometric star. This type of figure belongs to the family of Anatolian motifs often interpreted as a stylization of the tribal göl, an abstract representation of protection, or a geometric development of the protective diamond. Woven wool on wool. Plant-based dyes, shades of indigo blue, red ochre, pastel pink, brown, black, and ecru. Needless to say, this piece has great decorative potential; it pulsates and beats to the rhythm of the finest tradition of ancient Anatolian kilims. The piece is cataloged.
