Description

Walnut secretary desk with weekly planner - Louis-Philippe period, 19th century An elegant secretary desk with a drop-down flap that also serves as a weekly planner, crafted from walnut, featuring a tall, narrow front with clean lines. It opens at the top with a drawer, followed by a flap concealed within the front, which forms a writing surface when opened. The interior features a central compartment accompanied by three small drawers, two of which are arranged side by side, offering a layout characteristic of a secretary desk. The drop-down panel is fitted with a black writing surface. The lower section features a series of drawers with molded fronts. It has straight side panels, a slightly projecting cornice, and a base resting on small, molded front legs. The lock openings are discreet, in keeping with the
