lamp A remarkable workshop lamp by Ferdinand Solère A superb SOLR workshop and desk lamp, designed by the French creator Ferdinand Solère in the early 1950s. This iconic piece of post-war French industrial design was intended for professionals--architects, draftsmen, workshops, laboratories, and technical offices. This model features a highly refined construction, consisting of a weighted rectangular base, a tubular vertical stem, and a long articulated arm that allows for precise positioning of the light source. The piece is enhanced by a stunning hammered almond-green finish--characteristic of certain SolR productions--complemented by chrome-plated metal elements. The upper section features the remarkable wide-domed reflector typical of Solère's design language, housing an opaline diffuser that provides soft, task-appropriate lighting. Its silhouette--at once technical and elegant--reflects Ferdinand Solère's quest to design lighting that was lightweight, maneuverable, and highly functional, while also possessing a distinct aesthetic identity.
