well as magnificent Art Nouveau and later Art Deco pottery, characterized by their stunning colors and brilliance. He left behind a remarkable artistic legacy. A student at the École des Arts Saint-Luc in Tournai, the École des Arts Décoratifs in Strasbourg, and the school in Höhr-Grenzhausen, his son Fernand Elchinger (1911-1975) took over management of the business in 1934. He created ceramic collections that were highly regarded by an international clientele. He expanded the family business, turning it into the leading manufacturer in Europe. Like Chambost, Ruelland, Jouve, and Capron, Fernand Elchinger would become one of the great ceramic artists of the mid-20th century. From 1975 to the present, the Elchinger dynasty has been represented by Marc and then Thibaut Elchinger. Production has shifted decisively toward high-end tableware and home décor. Internationally renowned designers create vibrant, colorful collections that are always on-trend. However, the factory permanently closed its doors in 2016 after more than 200 years in operation and eight generations. Nevertheless, the Céramiques Elchinger brand is still used for its licensed products, and the Elchinger Couturier de la Terre brand for its contemporary collections.
