Antique ceiling lantern, featuring a glass-enclosed quadrangular cage with a black-patinated copper frame, accented with copper trim and details. At the center of the lantern is a central burner made of chiseled brass, topped by a socket. The entire fixture is suspended by a curved black metal bracket attached to a ceiling rose. There is a small chip in a hard-to-see corner of one of the glass panes; otherwise, it is in good overall condition and wired for electricity.
