Description

A large and interesting "anonymous" painting dating from the 1960s-1970s, depicting two young nude women sitting on a bench in a hammam...The work is unsigned, but its undeniable quality aligns with the "figurative surrealism" or "poetic figurative" movements that were in vogue during those years: Several painters were associated with this artistic movement, including Félix Labisse, Claude Verlinde, Balthasar Klossowski--known as "Balthus"--and Leonor Fini, to name only the most famous... Note: Aside from the question of attribution, this work exudes a sense of balance and harmony that suggests the hand of an excellent painter--a tip for art enthusiasts interested in research. - Plan for restoration to correct a few clumsy touch-ups and minor
