influenced by Expressionism and Futurism; he later evolved toward an intimist style characterized by a sober brushwork and controlled tones. His narrative art, at times caricatural and ironic, depicts scenes of everyday life: beaches, fairs, cabarets, etc. He was a close friend of Hergé, the creator of Tintin, and is in fact depicted in King Ottokar's Sceptre, page 59, panel 6, on the left, as the black-haired officer with a hooked nose holding his shako in his right hand. Works are held in museums in Antwerp and Brussels. The artist is listed in Bénézit, Arto, and Piron. Listed on Artprice, Artnet, Akoun, etc...This paper is in very good condition. The watercolor is in very good original condition. Small, barely visible water stains that are well integrated. See photos. In its more recent frame with glass backing, in good condition.
