Description

Small English enameled metal box, with a somewhat unusual shape reminiscent of a lidded tub with two handles. This pretty patchbox could also be used as a snuff box or a small candy dish. It was typically produced in the Staffordshire enamel workshops during the late 18th century, particularly in Battersea, Bilston, and their surrounding areas. Decoration is hand-painted with polychrome enamels. The domed lid features a lively landscape in vibrant hues, while the body is adorned with stylized floral motifs. The interior, glazed white, retains a clean appearance with a subtle network of craquelure. The brass mounting, possibly originally silver-plated, attests to careful craftsmanship. I have not cleaned it. Condition: satisfactory, with few signs of use, no chips or noticeable scratches. Dimensions: 5.6
